By Appointment.

St. Stephen's Green is a pleasant and carefully tended open space, close to the centre of the city, which since its re-arrangement in 1880 by Lord Ardilaun, has considerably redeemed the character given it by Thackeray, who remarked that it contained "not more than two nurserymaids to keep company with the statue of George II." for now it is a favourite and popular resort. Many of Dublin's chief institutions face this Square.
